

Star Chariot

- Star's Diary
 - Book Cover
 - My Earliest Memory
 - Torn Diary Page #1 (12/1/1556)
 - Torn Diary Page #2 (20/2/1567)
 - Torn Diary Page #3 (13/9/1568)
 - Torn Diary Page #4 (10/8/1569)
- Star Chariot Timeline (Minor Spoilers)

Star's Diary

Star's Diary

Book Cover

IVth Legion

~~Cyprus Laurellian~~

Anjele

Soren Steeleforte

~~Gato rem Vaelontius~~

Marcus quo Asina

My Earliest Memory

"Isn't love beautiful?" Her words, whispered, surprised him. He thought he was alone in the heavily wooded grove. The star lit sky pierced the leafy green trees that overlooked them, and the numerous fireflies lit the area like little lanterns. A giant pond sat in the middle of the grove, a neon cyan that illuminated from below, leaving the little bright squiggles on the shadows of anything that stood above it. And the centerpiece of it all, a Stag and Doe, stood knee deep in the pond, snuggling each other with their maned snouts. The boy was hiding off to the side, behind green bushes that sat at the edge of the water. Surprised by the whisper of the young girl's voice, the short wine-colored hair on his long rabbit-like ears stood up, his body shocked and stunned for a moment. He struggled to conceal his yelp with his hands cupping his mouth, afraid to disturb the romantic scene of the beasts in front of him. "What are you doing here?" He whispered back, in a sharp tone. The girl crawled to his side and sat on the grass next to him, also looking through the bush. She was a pretty Viera girl, about 7 years of age, bronze colored skin with wine colored hair matching the boy's. She had beautiful bright green eyes, and a small darkened nose. Freckles dotted her plump cheeks. She looked at the boy and smiled. "That's what you came to see, right? Love, in it's purest and most natural form." She spoke softly as she looked onward, lovingly and admiringly at the scene before her. "Why did you follow me?" The boy grumbled, "I thought I told everyone to leave me alone." "You're upset, aren't you? I can tell. You're doing that thing where you pout again." She chuckled innocently, without a hint of malice in her voice. "They were just teasing you, . There's no reason for you to take it so seriously" "They weren't kidding. Everything they said is true." The boy looked off to the side, closing his eyelids halfway. "I can't cook. I can't fight. I couldn't even shoot an arrow straight to save my life. Why would anyone want to love me?" He buried his face inbetween his knees, his voice started to shake. "I'm nothing but a failure." The girl stared at the now sobbing boy, and she placed a hand onto his shoulder. "That's not important. That's not what love is based off of. Look at the deer in front of us." The boy uncovered his teary eyes, looking at the scene that unfolded before him. The deer continued to snuggle and cuddle each other, without a care in the world. It was then that the boy's eyes widened, as he noticed the Stag. He was missing a horn. "She dosen't care if he's imperfect." She spoke again. "That's what love is. True love. Through all of our imperfections. If not, then nature would not have allowed such a thing to take place, right?" The two children kept their eyes on the beasts as they shifted position, and started to mate. The scene, now off-screen, held the focus of the boy. He had never seen anything like it before. The girl continued to speak gentle words to him. "When you show your dedication, when you can stay by their side, through everything. It dosen't matter what you can't do, because you do everything you can. For the one you love." They continued to watch the scene, the breaths of the boy finally settled, his tears strolled down the star-shaped mark that sat under his eye as he lifted his head completely from hiding. The girl leaned in closer to the boy, and kissed him on the cheek. She then lay her head on his shoulder, and the two of them stayed silent in the starlit grove. Time seemingly standing still, letting nature take it's turn to preach love.

Torn Diary Page #1

(12/1/1556)

that the glowyness was cuz of all the kristals in the water. That runinded the magick for me....why did yuo have to ask Gemma, Camie??? Dat was suposet to be our spesimal place!

12/1/1556 6ae

Today, I saw a big poop bird!! HA HA HA

 a big brown bird of some sort is drawn in colored pencil **

13/1/1556 6ae

Again, Gemma yellt at me. First cos i cannt do the cure spell. annd then cos i felld asleep during reeces. And then cos i kept misin the moving targat during boe bow practise. Evrybody thinks i cant do anything rite. i feel lonely

15/1/1556 6ae

I had a scary nitemare!!!!!! I was in a place with biggggg houses! All the way to the skie! And then FIRE rain came down!! And everything was on fire...it was scary. and then big black monstirs came out and eat all the peeples!!!! i woke up an ran to Ma, and i cried. She said its okie, its only a draem. I love Ma, when i grow up im guna take care of her.

 Below is a crayon drawing of large, dark monoliths with red and yellow lines drawn over them. In the space above, the page is littered with red and yellow dots. Between them are large black blobs with stubby limbs shown chasing what looks to be lanky stick figures. **

17/1/1556 6ae

Ma said she thinks im a man. I don noe what that means, but she starded crying. i dont like when ma crys. i told her i wil allwaes be by her sied. she held me tite and sed When father coms back home, he's gunna pick me up. She's rong! I'm never leaving ma!

18/1/1556 6ae

Tmorrow Im gunna maek Camie a neklice. Shes the only one im gunna give a present too, even thoe its every body elses is maen to me. Maebye if Ma ses i am a man den i wanna mary Camie cos she is teh niecest persin to me in the hole entier vilage!

Torn Diary Page #2

(20/2/1567)

20/2/1567 6ae

I've never been this seriously happy to find a piece of charcoal. Now I can finally write in my diary again! Did you miss me? I'm sorry I neglected you for the past few moons!

But of course, it's not like I'm scott-free anyhow. The only way I can write to you is at my bedroll in the dead of the night with a small candle. Spirits forbid if I get caught by one of the other guys...or worse. The teasing still hasn't stopped. As a matter of fact, it's gotten worse ever since they found out that I'm 2 years older than the other recruits. There's even more reason to look down upon me now...knowing that I can't even compete with the younger kids. It's not like I'm not trying or improving though! I've stopped crying! Because I know soon I'll be able to go back home. It's almost been an entire year since the men came to my village. Ma said their leader is my father, even though he seems so harsh and distant. It's the duty of every man in the village to leave once we're of age, and to protect our aether-dense woods from invaders and any other threats. It's supposedly our way of giving back to nature as she supplies us with her bounty. So every 2 years or so, they revisit the village to resupply, visit their lovers or make new ones, and pick up any children that have reached the right age. I...uhh...managed to skip the year where I was supposed to leave, because I technically was not of age until my weird-ass birthday (which came in the summer after recruitment). But it was kind of pointless, because here I am. Recruited with the boys almost 2 years younger than me and learning things that I should have learned a long time ago. One more year, one more year of suffering and hard work and teasing, and then I can go back home. And see Ma and give her the biggest hug. And maybe...just maybe...ask Camie for...well... It's getting late. If i don't get enough shut-eye i'll be fucking up training all day tomorrow. Not like it matters, I know I'll screw it all up anyways.

22/2/1567 6ae

My..uhh...dad...called me to his tent today.

I hadn't actually interacted with him in a long time. I've tried to avoid all types of conflict with our elders, since I didn't want to be called out for being mediocre. But at some point today, during our spear training, he leaned in and whispered his invitation to me.

I remember shuffling my way in nervously, looking around the room. All I said to him was, "What's up Pa? Ya need something from me?" He looked at me and squinted. Folded his arms and tilted his head back, looking down at me. "I need to make one thing clear." He said. "It matters not what your goals are here, how much effort you decide to put into your training, so on and so on. Only the strong will survive. And you are far from it, that much is plainly obvious. However, I didn't summon you here to state what we all know is true." He turned his gaze away, toward the tent wall, and it was here where I felt my heart sink. "You've referred to me as 'Father', 'Pa', and other such names. During training, during hunts, during scouts. I believe I've made myself clear to you during your recruitment a year ago. I will not, and cannot, treat my men any different from each other. I cannot afford to play favorites, we are all equal in status and all share the same burden." He turned his head halfway and glared at me with the corner of his eye. "Despite what your mother has told you, I am not your father. Refrain from calling me such names in the presence of others. Focus instead on your training, then maybe someday someone will be proud enough to make you their son." Then he made a shoo-ing motion, signaling me to leave. I didn't say anything, I just left with my eyes glued to the floor. I mean...I get why he would say that. Out here, we can't afford to be all buddy buddy, right? Family is just gonna slow us down. A-and I'd understand, I too would be ashamed if my son was a loser like me. It'll also affect the morale of the entire team too, I can't force my father to play favorites. So that's fine. From now on, I won't refer to my father as such. It'll be tough to hold back, but that's okay. As long as I have my diary, I have someone I can always talk to.

26/2/1567 6ae

Archery! The worst! I just. Don't. Get. It.

I managed to improve hitting stationary targets, but when they start moving I just keep seeing double. Whether it's the wooden targets or live targets, I feel like I'm seeing where it goes before it goes there. And they tell me to predict where the target will move and aim at the future spot, but it almost feels like...i'm predicting maybe a bit too far? I'm so confused. And frustrated! I actually tried so hard today and all I got were laughs from the other boys. Screw them all!

And the worst guy....I can't even remember his stupid sounding name. He knows Camie. And he brags and brags about how she's the trophy of our village. And he says he's going to ask her...to....to... Below the paragraph is a heavily scratched line of charcoal

I won't let him touch her.

2/3/1567 6ae

I found something interesting out in the woods. A camp of some sort. I saw what I thought were...humans? They look kinda like us, but with no ears. And a ton of them were wearing suits of metal, reflecting the light of the sun. I haven't told anyone about it yet. Maybe I can use this as an opportunity to elevate my status. Is that wrong? I'm thinking about taking out their leader. If it came to it, I'm pretty confident with my physical strength. All I'd need to do is get a clear shot first...and then rush in for the kill! And then I'll call for now, at least.

Torn Diary Page #3

(13/9/1568)

13/9/1568 6ae

The waitress asked me if I had gotten used to city life. I...was not sure how to answer that. It's been a little over a year since I arrived in Rabanastre, the famed "jewel of the desert". Yet, after all this time I've barely left this bar. Aside from the few times Anjelo would take me to the Muthru Bazaar to stock up on supplies. I guess the only bit of "civilized" life I've been exposed to is whatever our bar patrons would decide to bring in with them. Whether it was tales of the lands they've come from, or whatever treasures they'd show off to us.

Am I allowed to leave the bar? Short answer; no. At least, not without being accompanied by Anjelo himself. So I'm basically just a prisoner here, working for free like a slave. I wouldn't exactly call this 'city life'.

13/10/1568 6ae

I hate to admit it, but I was getting too comfortable living here. But after the events of today, I was quickly reminded that I don't belong.

It started off as a normal day at the bar; The four of us running things pretty much on our own. The chef hiding in the back, the waitress quickly servicing our regulars that came in the morning, and Anjelo the manager..."managing" things I guess. He's not really good at dealing with people anyways, being a Bangaa and all...so he's got that speech impediment that makes casual talk a bit awkward whenever foreigners are involved. But I digress.

Afternoon rolled in. I'm sitting on the stage, doing my usual job as a bard. Playing the cool lute shaped instrument Anjelo gave me for my last birthday. Just jamming out simple tunes as background music whilst our regular guys eat and drink. And then suddenly, the front doors slam open. A group of men...probably around five of them, walk in. All tall and lanky looking. Well known Garlean features, I'd say.

They slam their heavy bodies onto the empty chairs at the table up front. Our hard-working waitress rushes over and takes their orders, which were mostly just drinks. I continue with my music, trying to avoid eye contact with them. They get louder over time, voices booming as they laugh and slam their fists. "Hey love! Over here, quickly now! Our cups are empty! Be a dear and serve your countrymen.", I hear the loudest of them say. By this time, I'm sure he was drunk out of his mind.

I made the mistake of batting an eye at him when I saw him lay his hand on our waitress. He caught my gaze immediately and smirked, sipping his cup and maintaining eye contact until the waitress left.

"Oi, you! Ya gonna play something or stare all day?"

"That woodland bastard. I reckon he's newly come around here"

"Do you know who we are?"

I kept quiet, and I just turned my head away for a second. Anjelo told me over and over, I am NOT allowed to cause a disturbance of any kind. We are to keep a low profile. But they kept going:

"We occupied this damn waste of a city for nearly 50 bloody years! This place was uncivilized before we marched in, full of beast men and mutts. We demand respect."

He took one final gulp of what was left in his cup, then threw the damn thing to the floor. After he wiped his mouth, he leaned forward and changed the tone of his voice.

"Home Beyond the Horizon. Have you heard of that one? Play it."

At this moment, I'm not sure what I felt. Sadness? Anger? I think it's a mix of both. Those bastards. For the sake of keeping order, civility, doing things their way and no other way. They have the nerve to take everything from me for no other reason. My village, everyone I grew up with; they're all gone. Ma is gone. Camie is gone. And now, he wants me to show respect and appreciation for what his people have done?? These thoughts ran through my head. And I couldn't hold back, my sole desire was to grab one of the decorative spears off the wall and plunge it through his fat neck!

But luckily, I hear Anjelo shuffle over, dragging his oversized tail. Seeing him calmed me down.

“Gentlemen”, he said in his raspy voice. “I sssssincerely hope you are enjoying yourselvesssss.”

“We were,” said the lanky giraffe, as he stood up and stumbled. “But there’s only so much piss I can endure drinking from your beast filled establishment”

“Perhapssss you’ve had enough to drink” Anjelo stood up straight as he met the drunkard’s face.

“We didn’t march all the way from the North End to be harassed by an overgrown lizard.”

It was at this point where I could sense the hairs on the back of Anjelo’s neck standing up. I saw him clenching his fists. This was going to end badly.

“I will have satisfaction,” the drunkard kept going, “or I’ll file a report on the company you’re keeping. I’m sure the legion will make a full inspection tomorrow at my behest. I WILL have satisfaction.”

Anjelo squinted his eyes and grit his shark-like teeth. He then huffed and responded slowly and carefully.

“Fine. I proposse a deal. All of your drinksss and food you’ve had tonight will be free of charge...under the condition that thissssss next drink will be your lassssst.”

The other Garlean men placed their hands on the belligerent one’s shoulders to sit him back down. One of the more coherent men spoke for the drunkard. “That sounds like a mighty fine deal.” The drunk one just frowned and nodded his head as he turned to look at his fellows.

Anjelo looked back over his shoulder at me. “Go ahead, play the fucking sssong.”

And so...i sat down on the stool, and tried my best to play it from memory. A song about somehow returning home. A song about reclaiming one's homeland. A song sung for those who are willing to destroy other homes to take back their own.

Anjelo came out himself and served the men their last drinks. He said it was one of his special cocktails, he called it the "Maiden's kiss". They each silently sipped and stayed for maybe a minute or two more. When they finally left, the bar stayed silent. The other patrons slowly left, and our waitress went home immediately after. Anjelo didn't say another word to me all day, and we just closed up and cleaned up in complete silence.

I'm sure....Anjelo is not a fan of the empire. His ideals are different. I can tell, From the way he's treated his customers. Hells, even from the way he's treated me. Here, at the bar, I feel more like an employee than a slave. Thinking about it now....he's taught me so much this past year. How to save money, spend money, deal with people, play the lute, he's even taught me some impressive spear work. He's taught me and has been more patient with me than anyone in my village ever has been.

And yet....i still carved his name onto the cover of my book. Deep down, I can't forgive him.

13/11/1568 6ae

I had another weird dream.

I have very vague memories of something that happened to me in the past when I was a baby. Maybe around 3 years old or so. The dream oddly enough helped me remember some of the finer details.

In the dream, I saw myself at home, running to Ma. As I reached up for a hug, she faced me and returned what was a look of shock and horror. She wailed and cried as she rushed out of the house, calling for a chirurgeon.

The dream skipped to another scene. I remember waking up, with my cheek in pain. My ma hugged me and thanked the forest spirits. And the rest of the room was filled with the healers of our village, whispering to each other behind our backs.

And then I saw something. From the corner of my eye. In a tray on the bedside stand. It looked like a red, small shiny gem.

The next scene was something I was all too familiar with. Another scene of fire raining down from the heavens. And then I woke up. Hopefully I can keep track of my dreams through this journal and see if there's any deeper meaning to it all?

13/12/1568 6ae

So...he returned. Soren Steeleforte. After a whole freaking year, I never thought I'd see him again. One of the men I vowed to bring justice to. One of the men who changed my life forever. He stormed in near the end of the day, and walked to the backroom to speak with Anjelo. On his

Torn Diary Page #4

(10/8/1569)

10/8/1569 6ae

It's almost time. I'm too nervous to sleep. Radiant is tossing and turning on his side of the camp too. I think it's safe to say we're all a bit jumpy.

Tomorrow's the big day. Master went over the plans with us a few hours ago. We're going to destroy the final slave encampment, 78000 yalms off the western coast. Then, with all of those prisoners combined with our own liberated ones, we're to herd them across a large battletorn field to a fleet of 3 large ships docked at the shore. We don't expect much resistance, according to some of the rebel scouts. But just in case, Master has some of his "chariots" on the front line, ready to shield anyone from any incoming fire.

This might be my final chance to prove my worth, something I've been longing for ever since the day I left my village. With my spear techniques I learned from Anjelo, training from Master, and all the practice with Radiant, I've come far from the frightened little kit I used to be. To think, last year I was among the slaves at Rabanastre. Now, I'm part of the team to help free others. Lives are on the line, and I'm much better suited to defend them.

I just hope I do enough to be recognized by my Master. To be named a chariot, that is my new dream! To ferry the people to the freedom of the star.

And this time, I won't let anyone I love die.

12/8/1569 6ae

The handwriting on the rest of the pages are noticeably sloppier than usual

My hands ache. I am alive, but full of scrapes and bruises. I will try my best.....I NEED to....

For their sake...So that I may never forget....I will write as much detail as I can.

It was a nightmare. Taking down the prison camp was easy, but we didn't expect what came after. On the way to the shore with our people, we ran into an army. Not the Garlean one, although they were mostly comprised of what used to be Garleans.

It was an army of reanimated corpses. Of Undead.

And who else was at the head of the army, but Soren Steeleforte. That bastard was one step ahead. His obsession with me reached its peak.

Our army of gunbreakers chopped their blades into the flesh of the hoard of bodies that rushed towards us. They were unflinching and emotionless, clawing at us wildly with their bare hands. It was hard fighting an enemy with no fear in their hearts and no tactics in their minds. They had pale skin and completely white eyes, and moaned loudly. I even recognized one or two of the soldiers as I swung my spear at them. Luckily Radiant stayed by my side.

And even with the crazy amount of aether Soren probably used for this entire army, he somehow had enough to channel more surprises for us. He stood at the other end of the field, on an elevated piece of land, hurling explosion magicks after explosion magicks. The dust got into the eyes of many of our men, and from the clouds the undead leaped through and pounced. I saw...manyof our own...being toppled over and screaming as the zombies tore apart their bodies. But we had to stick to the plan. Master chanted at us to keep moving forward, freedom was almost ours.

And after we pushed through the crowd, Soren stood at the end. Waiting for us. Waiting for me.

"I granted you a favor, child. I know how much you wanted to take your revenge on us."

Soren spoke with an asshole grin on his face. "So I brought you a gift. The means to strike another name off your list."

He motioned over a hulking, armored beast man from behind him; His visor obscuring his face. The iron behemoth brandished his javelin toward me. And so...I unsheathed my own spear. Thinking about it now...I didn't understand what Soren meant at the time. I wish I could have realized it sooner before I brazenly leapt at my opponent.

Utilizing my powerful legs, I jumped high into the air, and dove toward the metal man. A technique I remember fondly, one I had practiced hard back at Rabanastre. A dragon slaying move, meant to pierce the scales of the enemy. But to my surprise, the mysterious opponent knew what I was going for and dodged the dive, leaping into the air himself and slashing downward on my back. Who knew this heavy guy could jump?!

I didn't let that stop me. I pushed myself off the ground and readied my next move, a series of thrusts aimed at the gaps in his armor. And to my surprise, he stood there, allowing himself to get stabbed. He didn't flinch, he felt no pain, and he effortlessly grasped the shaft of my weapon and sliced me with his own. Every time I poked him after that, he punished me with a counter, knocking me back over again and again.

I grew tired of taking hits and getting my ass kicked, so I switched tactics. I took a step back and assumed a defensive stance, waiting for him to make his next move. I tried to focus on any opening movements he was about to make, but my eyesight started to act up again. It was very faint, but I saw a double vision of my opponent, bending his knees slightly and sweeping the floor with his spear. So I instinctively jumped, supposedly before he even began to swing. High into the air above him, I kicked his visor cleanly off his face and sent it cascading through the air. I landed and turned to look at my opponent's face.

What I saw...had me stunned. I felt time slow down, the dirt and soot in the air drifted down as it brushed past my face. The sounds of people yelling and the clashing of steel were muffled. Memories of my days at Rabanastre came rushing back at me. His voice rang in my mind.

"That price is a ripoff! You can get a sssstack for lessssss on the market board. WITH Dalmascan taxessssss"

"You idiot. They don't make hatssssss for Vierassssss. Put that back."

“Order up! Boy, play your bessssst ssssong!”

I felt the tears build up and overflow down my cheeks. My vision blurred as his bulky figure stumbled closer and closer to me.

“Happy Namesssday.” his voice continues to play in my thoughts. “What? You never had a namesssday celebration? Then what am I ssssupposed to do with thissssss guitar? You may as well take it, improve your bard playing and make me more coin”

My grip on my spear loosened and dropped to the floor. He came at me closer and closer, and I was able to see his face a little more clearly. The same shape, the same sharp teeth, the same leathery skin and unique Bangaa pattern on his forehead. But his skin was pale. His body limped. His gaze was empty and stone cold.

Time felt slow as a snail, and still I was frozen in place, powerless to react as he lifted his javelin and prepared the final blow.

“Boy, what are you doing here?”

A memory from the past rushed through my consciousness. I saw myself at the bar, caught sneaking into the back room to grab a midnight snack.

“I was hungry.”

“Hmph, you sssaying I dont feed you enough?”

“Fuck off”

He laughed and coughed.

“I know you hate me kid, I’ve seen yer hitlist. I’m ssssurprised you remembered our names sssso dissstinctly.”

I remember clenching my fists and gritting my teeth at him.

“You all introduced yourselves when Cyprus first caught me in the woods. Big mistake.”

He took a drag of his cigarette as he stared miles into the blank wall.

“Half of them are gone nowThink I'll be next?” He slumped his shoulders ever so slightly. “You don't need to forgive me. Hellssss, I'd want you to be the one to finish me off eventually.”

I scoffed. “Why though?”

Anjelo flicked his cigarette as he blew his last puff of smoke.

“What happened that following day...I doubt you remember any of it.”

I shrugged. I just stayed quiet as he kept going.

“I wouldn't wish that on anyone. Sssso many innocents sssacrificed their livesssss. It wasss a misssstake to get into the buisinesssss of working for the army.”

He then looked at me in the eye, and put one of his overwhelmingly large claws on my shoulder. “Give up on revenge, it's not worth the losssss of your life nor the livessss of otherssss. Find a way to esssscape from here. Find a new life, and live for thosssse that gave you the chance to live again.”

He then lifted his weight off my shoulder and stumbled out of that room.

I remember...I remember getting angry. I remember wanting to hate, hate so much that I could be driven to be a fearful unforgiving killing machine. I can hear the people of my village, every single one of them, crying out for justice. Telling me to remember fondly what happened so that my rage may continue to burn and push my resolve for revenge. ButDo I remember?

I remember....I.....remember?.....I couldn't....I don't remember....What....happened? What happened to everyone that day?

And whenever I tried to remember that tragic day, one of their voices would ring louder than the rest, and bring them to silence. It was Camie, her voice calm enough to still my emotions. Telling me it's okay, I don't need to know. To leave the past behind...and live my own life, looking forward to the new tomorrow.

Next thing I remember seeing....was the bladed tip of his javelin zooming toward me. I thought that was it, my journey would be over. My quest for justice would be at an end, and I would die breaking the promises I've made to myself.

I cried out his name, one last time.

Suddenly, I saw a blinding flash of light. Followed by an ear piercing sound of clashing steel. I tumbled backwards onto my butt. And when I looked ahead, I saw a big aetherical barrier, shaped like a bubble. Inside the bubble was a hulking figure of Hrothgar, his lion-like mane and teeth and his human-like stance. It was none other than my mentor, my teacher and savior.

“Master!” I cried out.

“I’ll hold him off!”, he struggled to shout the words as he blocked the javelin with the broad side of his azure blade. “You and Radiant run to the ships!”

I nodded and hopped to my feet without hesitation. Master continued to strike and parry Anjelo’s spear, the steel ringing over and over. As they fought, I ran to Radiant’s side. Radiant at the time was deflecting blasts from Soren’s onslaught of magick.

“We need to go, now!” I told Radiant. He simply nodded and we started to dash away. Soren must have noticed our escape, so he raised his arms in the air and shouted.

“I won’t let you escape me, boy!”

I saw him channel a giant electrical ball of magic floating over him, and with an exaggerated motion he flung the magical ball toward us.

Again, my eyes fooled me. I saw the explosion before it happened, it was almost like a vision or a premonition. A giant wave of bright cackling energy was about to wash over all of us. We wouldn’t have survived, or worse, we would’ve been paralyzed from the blast, leaving me to be easily caught by Soren.

“No!” I heard the Master call out to us. Our master again tried to be our shield, as he pulled the trigger and swung his blade toward our direction right before Soren’s magick came into contact. A wave of soothing light engulfed Radiant and I, and the shockwave from Sorens magick was halted in its beams. Master managed to save my life yet again

But then I realized, the shock was only halted where the shield began, and the shield only covered Radiant and I. I looked frantically for Master, only to see him struggle with paralysis as he pointed the tip of his blade toward us. It was then at that moment, suddenly and without warning, Angelo's javelin pierced Master's back and plunged through his chest. Anjelo released the weapon and took several steps back, and just stared coldly at us.

Master fell to his knees and coughed up blood, as pools of it splattered out from his wound. Radiant ran up to him, and from where I was standing he looked to be slouched over. They spoke to each other, I couldn't tell what the words were. Radiant then laid our Master down to the floor on his side. He seemed to wipe his eyes for a moment, then Radiant looked up at Anjelo and grasped his own gunblade. To this day, I've never seen Radiant so much as shout or raise his voice; but at that moment, he roared like a beast and bared his huge saber teeth at Anjelo. Soren took his place by Anjelo's side, and Radiant sprinted madly at the pair.

I lost notice of the ongoing battle, my focus on Master. I ran up to his body and saw the damage up close. It was bad. The palms of his hands were painted red, small red rivers ran down the sides of his mouth. I cried enough today, yet still the tears streamed down. I frantically tried to cover his wound without pulling the spear out, and I assured Master I would help him. The blood kept spilling out, and I was running out of options.

There was one thing I thought of trying, but like the idiot I am I thought I could pull it off. Like those heroes in those legends that perform amazing feats only at the most perilous times. And I was desperate. I reached my hands out toward Master, and tried my hardest to channel my body's aether toward him. I pushed and pushed and pushed.

"Cure!" I screamed. Nothing seemed to have changed, so I pushed my hands closer to his wound.

"Cure!" I shouted. "Cure, damn you! Cure!"

I pushed and held my breath, and I felt my face turn blue.

"Cure!!!" I slapped my cheeks out of frustration. "Just do a simple Cure!"

Nothing. Not an ounce of aetherflow. What did I expect?

"Useless..." I whispered under my breath. "...fucking useless. I can't save anyone. I never could."

I felt a heavy hand placed on my shoulder. It was Master. Struggling to breathe, he looked at me and gave a small smile. I could feel my heart and my chest crumble to pieces.

"It's not time to give up yet..." he whispered in a raspy voice. He took his arm off my shoulder and reached for his gunblade, shaking as he rose it toward me. "...you still need to help Radiant."

My eyes were drawn to the shiny blue steel, my tears stopped and I grabbed hold of the hilt. In the palm of his same hand, he dropped a yellow crystal onto my lap. He coughed and gasped for air before speaking again.

"Don't try to be....what you aren't meant to be..." he heaved "...take my place. Be the protector...the chariot...that these people need."

He was right. I was never meant to be a hunter. A killer. A healer. No...but there was something that I could do still. I wiped my tears and tried to stop my lips from trembling.

"A chariot?" I asked him.

He closed his eyes and smiled as he spoke his final words.

"Live on and protect... for those you have lost....and for those you can....yet save...."

His breath left his body, and his head dropped to the ground. He laid there lifeless with a sort of serenity to his face. I took his crystal and placed it in my pocket.

"Thank you...for everything"

With his words echoing in my mind, and his final command, I marched toward the battle between Radiant and Anjelo.

....now that I'm writing this...I realize...I left his corpse behind....

I just informed Radiant. He told me that's what he would have wanted us to do anyways, to protect ourselves and stick to the mission first and foremost. I can't help but feel uneasy about it. Master deserves a proper burial. Maybe.....tomorrow or the day after, I'll gather Radiant and the guys to do something for him...

Anyways...back to the story. I've got a new pot of ink. My hand hurts...but I must keep going. I need to document everything now that my memory is still fresh.

I saw Radiant and Anjelo doing battle...Radiant fiercely focused on him. I could tell he was letting his rage get the better of him, swinging wildly whilst the unarmed Anjelo was just dodging his blows. It didn't occur to me until I realized: Soren was unaccounted for! I scanned the area for the damn elf, until I saw some sort of aether energy building up in the distance.

Not far behind Anjelo was Soren, using him as a human...ish...shield. Whilst Anjelo was busy distracting Radiant, Soren was conjuring another explosive spell. Yet again, I foresaw the attack. I needed to do something. I couldn't risk losing another friend on the battlefield.

I felt the master's crystal pulse. The move he did before, shielding us with light, was clear in my mind. The only problem...that move required some sort of aether to be channeled from the user.

But maybe...just maybe...I could channel it. With master's help from his crystal. I didn't have a choice, Soren was about to attack. And I had no time to think of anything else....so I sprinted toward Radiant, getting as close as possible.

"Radiant! Watch out!" I shouted. Radiant turned toward me, and his eyes widened when he saw me raise the blade toward the sky. He jumped back toward me, and that was when Soren waved his arms and released his spell. I had nothing else to trust but instinct, so I waved the gunblade in front of us both and pulled the trigger...

"Heart of Light!"

By some miracle, a wave of light washed over us. The fiery splash from Soren's spell disintegrated before us. I remember the look on Soren's face, he sucked his teeth and furrowed his brow so tightly that one of them started to twitch. Radiant's jaw dropped, as he looked around us.

"This looks...just like the master's..." He then turned to me, "How did you manage? Is that his blade?"

I looked up at him and silently nodded.

"Now is our chance. Look ahead, they're both stunned. And perfectly lined up. I have an idea."

Radiant lifted his own blade, pointed skyward. "Follow my lead, then pull the trigger when I say go!"

So I switched the blade to my left hand, and did the same as Radiant. Both of us, side by side, with blades pointed straight up.

"Now! Pull the trigger!"

And as soon as I did, a giant wave of pressure pushed downward on my arm, forcing me to brace my leg into the sand. I looked up and saw a pillar of light piercing from the tips of our blades, through the dust in the air and into the starry sky. The very wind in the air blew past, as if the gales were opening the path before us.

We aimed our attack, positioned to line up both of our enemies together. And then....

“Let’s finish this together!” Radiant and I shouted at the top of our lungs!

“Blasting Zone!”

We slammed our blades into the ground, the beam of light followed. The earth quaked as it touched the floor, and split the ground. The shockwave shot forward through our enemies, as I heard the sound of metal crunching and drowned out screaming. What followed was a bright flash of light, and left me blind for a few seconds.

The clouds of dust that blocked our view dissipated. All around us were our soldiers and prisoners of war, some of them stood at attention and turned toward us. The undead stood petrified, some of them fell to the ground. And before us was a burnt straight line drawn on the ground, running straight through Angelo’s body as it laid flat, his armor cracked and crumbled. And in the distance behind him, Soren sat on his ass, stunned at how close he was to succumbing to the same fate.

Now that the fighting came to a brief pause, and the air was clear enough for us to see the ocean, the first thing that came to mind was the opportunity to run.

Radiant took a deep breath, then shouted. “Chariots! Master gave us the order.” He looked directly at me. “Abandon the fight! Run toward freedom! Take our prisoners and liberate them!”

The soldiers around us roared and cheered.

My mind went blank. All I remember after that was jogging through the dry sand, tripping constantly as the grains crept into my clothes and boots. My arms were heavy, my eyes were burning. But I kept moving, my eyes fixed on the back of that giant Hrothgar. Eventually I felt the cool breeze in the air, the smell of burning fire transformed into a salty smell. And before us were three giant wooden arks, with ramps propped down into the wet sand.

I then remember crawling on all fours, up the wet wooden floors, scraping my burned and bruised body against the splinters. And then once I felt myself on a leveled surface, I collapsed. I closed my eyes. I felt a stillness...followed by turbulence... and then a gentle rocking. Almost felt like I was crawling back into Ma's arms...after a long and horrible nightmare. I felt myself slip away...consciousness drifting off, and then I fell into a deep dark abyss of nothingness.

And well... I guess.....

I woke up here. In this bed. Radiant filled me in, saying I passed out as soon as we boarded.

I was asleep for a long time, but it feels like everything just happened.

Right now we're staying in a special cabin. The ships were pre arranged to sail us directly to Thavnair. I've never been on a boat before but....the rocking and swaying feels nice.

I think I'll just take...another nap....

15/8/1569 6ae

A lot has happened the past few days.

Radiant calls me a soldier now, after seeing me fight. He says when I get better, he wants to train me more with the gunblade.

We've got plenty of time, after all. Considering I decided not to make land at Thavnair.

Oh right, about that.

We're going to drop off a ton of our men at the port, and from there they'll be taking other ships off to other parts of the world.

This ship we're on will dock for a few days, but then it's off to an island called Vylbrand. Some place far, far to the west. So far away that empire has yet to reach it. And there, a large city by the sea called Limsa Lominsa. A place full of people and pirates coming and going from different places around the world.

Radiant said he'll be heading there for his own personal reasons. I suppose I have nowhere else to go now, so I'll be following. He assures me that I can find a new start there and live my own life. Freedom.

Yesterday we held a candle vigil for Master. We said a few words here and there, and spoke about his life. He had a wife that he loved dearly, but she lost her life during the Bozja incident. Ever since then, he dedicated his life to saving the victims of the empire. Radiant knew him for much longer than I have....so the loss hit him the hardest.

As for his blade...Radiant told me to keep it. We noticed after that day, there was an aether infused cartridge loaded into its chamber. Which is weird, Master knew how to manipulate the aether fairly well. Radiant came to the conclusion that Master had planned to hand me the blade before we even had that battle and he made that cartridge especially for me. The protective barrier and light beam I was able to shoot back then...was all thanks to his planning.

I said a few prayers for Anjelo too. I know he was an asshole at times....but he really did care for me. He didn't deserve what Soren did to him. I thought all this time he and Soren were friends. But I guess there was a lot I didn't know.

One of the people we saved from Dalmasca was a fortune teller and astrologian. She offered a free reading for me, considering today was my namesday. She spoke very obscurely and said things that didn't make much sense to me, but she drew cards from a deck for me. Ironically..the first card she drew was a Chariot card. Then she drew a card of the Star. She said something about new beginnings, and running off to the rest of the world headfirst.

New beginnings....that's not a bad idea. Radiant and I ended today by looking out toward the ocean and talking about what we'll do. He mentioned to me about meeting the Roegadyn race that live in La Noscea. He admitted that he was named using the same conventions as the mountain Roegadyn that live in the north. It's pretty cool, they name themselves after objects that represent themselves...like Tall Rock or Blazing Wind.....or Fat Arse...

He said that we'll be completely new in the land of Eorzea, and we'll have to form up identities to be recognized by the various faculties that govern it.

Hmm...having a cool Roegadyn name like RADIANT MOUNTAIN would be awesome....

And besides....I'm not the same frail Viera that hid in the forests and ran from conflict. I'm a warrior now, a protector of the weak! A chariot...like Master called me....

A chariot for the star....hmmm

"What do you think, Rem?" Radiant asks me. " A name like that sounds a bit extravagant but...I think it fits you"

Yeah...I think I'll stick with it.

Today, I turn 19 years old. My name is Star Chariot. And from now on, I fight to protect the ones I love. I fight to ferry the people to the freedom of the star!

Star Chariot Timeline (Minor Spoilers)

(I added a simplified timeline at the end, for quick reference)

6th Astral Era

Year 1550:

Rem Amara was born into the Amara clan. Their birth occurred in the latter half of the year, during the late summer season. This aroused suspicion from the other members of the clan, considering most women give birth during the autumnal seasons exactly 9 moons after the males rejoin during the deep cold for mating purposes. Thus it was implied that Rem's conception was taboo, their true father being unknown. In rare cases such as this, it's arranged to give the title of "father" to the clan leader.

Year 1551:

Word of Garlean invasions of the Nagxian jungles reaches the Amara clan. The leader calls for drastic changes to fortify their defenses. New harsher training regimens and strict patrolling routes are introduced.

Year 1552:

Doma falls to the Empire.

Year 1553:

At the end of the year, Rem, currently 3 summers old, wakes up experiencing sharp pain on the side of his face. To their mother's shock, she finds an abnormal growth on his right cheek. Rem is rushed to the surgeon for an emergency surgery. A red stone-like object was forced out of their skin. The wound took many moons to heal, eventually leaving a twin star-shaped scar on their cheek. The whereabouts of the red stone is currently unknown.

Year 1556:

Rem learns basic reading and writing. Quickly becomes friends with one of the tribe's most prominent members, Camie Amara. Camie being a few years older, becomes sort of an "older sister" to Rem. The two of them contrast in talents, with Camie having a natural affinity for learning and aether manipulation and Rem having difficulties with focusing on anything aether-related. Rem instead focuses on becoming the "class clown", playing various instruments and performing humorous acts to garner the attention of the other villagers.

Year 1562:

Rem begins going through stages of puberty. With their gender revealed to be male, Rem's mother fears the worst for his fate. Meanwhile, Rem is constantly plagued by nightmares and visions of horrid destruction.

Experiments with the mysterious Dalamud lead to the complete annihilation of the Bozja Citadel in an event known as the Bozja Incident.

Year 1564:

The Amara clan's current traditions stated that every few years during the winter season, during the deep freeze, the males of the tribe return home from protecting the woods. Feasts and celebrations are had and males take the opportunity to bed their lovers. It is during this brief period of time that younger men who have reached maturity are drafted to join their brethren.

The current Amara leader deemed it necessary to change tradition in response to the Garlean threat, so the recruitment process had been changed to draft males every two years, immediately after puberty, at the age of 14 Summers.

Due to a technicality, Rem's mother was able to withhold his recruitment on the grounds that his namesday was technically in the summer of the year, thus Rem had technically only been 13 summers old at the time of recruitment. This will have a lasting effect on Rem, being left behind a generation of recruits.

Year 1566:

At 15 summer's old, Rem could no longer avoid the inevitable. After a tearful farewell, Rem says goodbye to his mother and Camie to join his "father".

The combat training was harsh indeed. Not taking any of his weaknesses into account, Rem was constantly pushed to do what he believed was impossible for him to do. His peers looked down on him and mocked him constantly, while the leader was met with disappointment on a daily basis.

Rem, used to the loving admiration he was given at home, yearned for attentiveness amongst his peers. He looked for any opportunity to prove himself worthy of such.

Year 1567:

By the turn of the new year, Rem's skills with archery barely improved. His vision was constantly obscured by the abundance of aether in the woods.

An opportunity presented itself. Rem ran off looking for supplies when he stumbled upon a newly built Garlean camp. This detachment of soldiers was led by a man known as Cyprus. Instead of running off to warn his fellow brothers, Rem believed his moment came. He carefully aimed his bow at Cyprus and loosened an arrow, which surprisingly would have met its mark. Unfortunately, Rem was outmatched by this man's experience in battle as Cyprus instinctively parried the incoming shot.

Rem was subdued and beaten, and captured by the soldiers. The rest of the Viera warriors arrived at the scene and looked onwards from the shadows. Rem noticed their presences, and was struck with a sense of dread when he witnessed his father turn away in one last look of disappointment. The soldiers, led by Cyprus, transported Rem to a larger Garlean stronghold on the outskirts of the Skatay woods, closer to the desert. It was here where Cato rem Vaelontius was in charge, being monitored by his assistant Marcus quo Asina and shadowed by Soren Steelforte. Many of the armed forces here were mercenaries from Dalmasca, one of which was the Bangaa dragoon unit, Anjelo.

With a Garlean shock collar equipped, Rem was interrogated by Cyprus, forced to reveal the location of the Amara village under the false promise that no one would be harmed. The empire believed that this village was hoarding large amounts of aether crystals and feared the ramifications of such, due to recent reports of beast tribes all over Aldenard using crystals as leverage.

Rem agreed to lead the army to his home. Upon arrival at the village, The Garlean unit was met with the full force of the Amara tribe's fighting force. Both men and women stood ready for battle behind the Amara tribe leader, all wielding bows and spears. Negotiations were cut short when Rem was offered as a bargaining chip. The leader of the Amara tribe ordered his men to shoot first, thus sparking a large-scale battle.

Rem managed to escape his captors in the confusion of battle and struck Cyprus Laurellian with a spear, managing to end his life. This would be the first time Rem has taken a life.

The battle persisted as waves of Viera fell to the overwhelming might of the Empire. Cato took to the frontlines of battle and eventually wandered off. Soren and Marcus desperately searched for him. The rest of the soldiers fought through the village until they cornered the remaining Viera women at the town's center. In a desperate last ditch effort, an attempt was made to

.....
.....not HIS FAULT.....
.....PROTECT.....

.....found in a hidden grove behind the village. The grove was illuminated by the light of the crystals that were sunken at the bottom of the lake. Cato, being watched by Soren in the shadows, succumbed to the overwhelming might of the

.....
.....

Rem was found unconscious in the grove, next to Cato's body. Soren Steelforte, with the help of the mercenary Anjelo, transported Rem carefully back to the Dalmascan desert and eventually back to the capital city Rabanastre. No other soldiers involved in the battle, Garlean nor Amara, survived that day.

Rem was kept under supervision of Anjelo, laying low in a quaint bar in Rabanastre, while Soren marched off, preparing to deal with the repercussions of such a massive Garlean loss in an unapproved campaign. Soren planned to return at a later date, to pay Anjelo a massive fee for his services and to recruit Rem for his own personal reasons.

Year 1568:

Rem continues to work under Anjelo, unaware of the exact details of the battle. Anjelo teaches Rem some basic spearwork on the side, and Rem practices reprising his role as a musician.

As the Autumn seasons approach, unwanted attention is drawn to the bar. Soren prepares to make his return before something drastic happens.

Out of sheer luck, the soldiers responsible for causing a scene at the bar were attacked the following night by a "terrorist" group. The mysterious group caused multiple explosions in this section of the city, inciting mass panic. In the chaos, Anjelo urged Rem to run away before Soren could return and claim him.

Rem bumps into the leader responsible for the attack on Rabanastre. Calling themselves the "Chariots", Lost Hrothgar Draganek Nova aimed to free the POWs of the empire. With nothing else to lose, Rem follows the Chariots along with other freed slaves.

Later on in the year, Rem expresses interest in the Chariot rebel group's motives. He becomes fast friends with another fighter named Radiant Mountain. Although the two of them have different moral views, they both agree on resisting against the Empire. Knowing this may be his second chance, Rem pledges his loyalty to Draganek and hopes that he might become the warrior he failed to become once.

Draganek, referred to exclusively as "Master" by Rem, teaches the boy how to fight using a gunblade. Unlike Rem's "father", Master took note of Rem's weaknesses. (No control over aether and blurred vision).

For the rest of the winter season, Master Nova led his chariots through various campaigns around the Dalmascan regions, freeing captured prisoners and destroying Garlean fortresses.

Year 1569:

The Chariots arranged one final, large-scale mission. A giant Ceruleum plant was to be destroyed and its prisoned workers were to be transported across the sea on a vessel, arranged by deals made with pirates. The first half of the mission was largely successful. However, the escape across the plains toward the ship developed into a battleground.

Soren Steelforte made his return, and unleashed chaos in an attempt to reclaim Rem and regain favor with the Empire. Using magicks unseen before, he resurrected husks of former soldiers and used them as his army. One of them being Anjelo, the Bangaa that took charge of Rem's care.

After a heartbreaking battle, Master Draganek Nova fell was slain and passed on his Azure Gunblade to Rem, a blade specially outfitted for non-aether use (possibly reverse engineered from Garlean weaponry). Rem and Radiant fought back against Anjelo's shadow, and managed to deal a blow to Soren large enough to stop the onslaught of attacks. The rest of the prisoners of war and Chariots that survived, along with Rem and Radiant, made their way to the vessel and escaped.

The boat docks at the continent of Thavnair before making its way to Eorzea. Rem and Radiant decide to ride the boat to the end, taking on the advice of the late Master to start a life anew.

Summer arrives, the boat on it's way to Limsa Lominsa. Rem is influenced by Radiant to change his identity before registering as a citizen. Using a similar naming convention as the Hellsguards (and with the help of a mysterious Astrologian), Rem renames himself as Star Chariot, in honor of the Chariots and the world in which he hopes to explore and protect.

Radiant snickers at the coincidental star markings on his face.

Year 1570:

Star attempts to find work as a disciple of the land (one of the few things he was good at back home). He finds himself living in the streets of Ul'dah, amongst the Ala Mhigan immigrants. The corruption of the nobles in the city prevents Star from ever making enough gil to afford a place to live.

One day, a scholar approaches Star. Claiming to be from a distant paradise, he offers Star a place to live in return for knowledge on where he obtained a certain "artifact". Throwing caution to the wind, Star accepted the proposal.

On the exact date of his namesday, Star officially celebrates his 20th Summer as a new citizen of Old Sharlayan. He would spend the next few years enrolled as a student and take on requisition jobs after he graduated. But of course, history repeats itself and he yet again forgoes his studies in favor of drawing attention from the crowds (especially the females) and playing music.

One of the scholars notes that he might be failing because of his poor eyesight, so a special pair of crafting glasses were offered to Star. The special lenses actually dampened the strength of visual aether, to allow precise and accurate vision when crafting with small objects like jewelry. The glasses seem to work perfectly for Star, and improve his abilities to aim. Unfortunately, the days of shooting a bow are over but at the very least he can see the board clearly.

YEAR 1572: THE BATTLE OF CARTENEAU AND THE 7TH UMBRAL CALAMITY

Prior to the calamity, Star learns of Louisoix Leveilleur and his circle of knowing. Inspired by their attempts to prevent the incoming doom (and of course, fighting against the Empire), Star joins with a group of protestors to convince the Forum to act. Fourchenault Leveilleur, son of Louisoix and head of the governing body, disbanded the protests and personally saw to strip Star of his student privileges.

During the destruction of the land of Eorzea, Old Sharlayan made efforts to shield themselves and protect its citizens. Star looked onwards as the skies turned red and rained fire, and was reminded of his recurring nightmares. He locked himself in his room and slept for 12 days straight.

Star becomes 22 summers old.

7th Umbral Era

YEAR 0-5:

Star continues to live in Old Sharlayan, taking up jobs as a gleaner. He explores the ruined landscapes of the nearby areas, but never adventures too far. It's not until the 5th Year of the 7th Umbral Era, when Star becomes 27 Summers old, and decides to take up his gunblade and become more than just a scavenger.

Star learns of free companies rising up all throughout Eorzea, and applies to join several of them. He finds Radiant in the streets of Limsa and learns of the free company he joined. Determined this time to stick with his friend, he applies to the free company (known as <PIZZA> at the time).

7th Astra Era

YEAR 1-PRESENT

Star becomes more involved in adventures and battles that involve the company. Through them, he was introduced to key members such as Lapis L'azuli, Van Healsing, Lily Malice, Tora Keegan, Marden Fauchard, and others.

A summer later, the free company disbands over a dispute regarding its leaders at the time, and the vacant house is left in the hands of current leader Lily Malice. With plenty of resources left in the company vault, Star takes advantage and learns different fighting styles using a few soul crystals. Yet still, he actively avoids classes that involve aether manipulation, and will use certain technologies to circumvent that.

(Possibly several years) later, Star searches for more companions as he discovers more and more of the world around him.

He crosses paths with Gabriella Versi, a young looking pale AuRa girl with a love for books and reading the stars. After a small conflict that resulted in Star inviting her to his free company, the two of them develop a strong bond. Star becomes immensely loyal to the girl, willing to follow her to the end of the star. Even though she has a deep and dark past, Star still sees the light that shines through her smile. He shows to have problems comprehending the true nature of Gabriella, and even though he has problems understanding, his heart still never wavers.

Star also meets Gabriella's long lost sister, known as Aolani Be. He sees her as slightly more dainty, but physically still strong. A gorgeous sight for his eyes, he is drawn to her mystery and alluring beauty. They develop a somewhat interesting relationship, with quite possibly a deeper connection involving Soren Steelforte. She strives to bring out the best in Star, and despite him being unable to realize this, he still tries his best to impress her.

Rowan Peregrine (now a Versi as well), a girl who seemed to have mysteriously appeared before Star, initially showed up as just a romantic interest for Gabriella. Star's curiosity led him to learn more about her. Being a voidsent and daughter of Diabolos, she was gifted with an aptitude for otherworldly magic power and immortality. Star initially was wary and skeptical, but his own ineptitude for magic led him to watch her carefully and closely.

In an unknown year, Soren Steelforte made his way to Eorzea, tracking down Star's location. When the two of them confronted each other, Soren pleaded Star to join him. Star, being much older and stronger than he was before, denied the request. No longer would he be subject to whatever twisted desires Soren had.

The disagreement turned into a skirmish. Star rode his then Chocobo, Empress, into battle. He faced Soren with his physical abilities, but was quickly outmatched by Soren's magic. The gale winds he summoned sliced up Empress, killing her in the process. Soren left him be, a reminder of the power difference between the two. Star mourned the loss of his steed, and feared the return of Soren.

In the year that followed, Star bore witness to the bonding of Rowan and Gabriella. His personal relationship with Aolani grew, and the four of them became close enough to be considered "family".

The following year, Gabriella Versi decided to face her dark past. Star forced himself to take this journey with her, and the two of them embarked to Meracydia.

Gabriella and Star made their way to her old home, full of tempered villagers. Gabriella fought coldly and with conviction, but Star was not yet of the same mindset. He was tricked into a situation where he nearly died, letting his guard down when coming across a group of tempered children that resembled the children of his own clan. Luckily, Gabriella intervened and fought them off as Star lay bleeding to death from multiple stab wounds. Rowan had granted him a pair of vials containing vampire's blood, which saved him from an untimely death. The result gave him an increase in power and strength.

The pair of them fought their way to the summit to face off against the elder primal Apoldyon, the one responsible for the current state of her people. Gabriella fought with reckless abandon, desperate to end the curse that plagued her. With no concern for the wellness of her physical being, Star was left with the arduous task of healing with limited Aetheric ability. When the battle was over, Gabriella was left with fatal wounds, her body burnt and broken. Star cursed himself for not being able to heal effectively, but Gabriella assured him that he did his best.

Star then carried Gabriella back to safety and the two of them spent the remainder of their journey visiting key locations, Gabriella performing sending rites to lay her mother to rest. Star once again was affected by visions, this time of the late Miltifan.

Once returned home, Star was plagued with feelings of helplessness and guilt. Recalling the feelings he received from partaking of the vampire's blood, he approached Rowan with the request of being transformed permanently. She agreed and underwent various preparations for the ritual.

Star had to “die” before the transformation could be complete. However, certain complexities led to technicalities. It would seem that, rather than transforming his being into that of a voidsent, his body continued to live through the ritual and instead absorbed the voidsent abilities into itself.

After a painful and slow process, Star awoke with the abilities befitting a vampire. His current abilities include:

Rapid healing factor

Basic Aether manipulation (through blood magic)

Illusion magic, which can only be seen by those willing to view it (aka mods)

Conjuring small familiars

Trade-offs include:

Weakness to Sunlight, although not fatal but can be a hindrance especially when exposed to his eyes

A never ending, insatiable thirst for blood to replace the large amounts of aether consumption

Now officially a “daughter” of Rowan, Star pledges to help her much in the same way as Gabriella; to fight Diabolos and reclaim her rightful position. The two of them continued to grow closer, with Rowan acting as a sort of mentor to her new “baby bat”.

Currently, Star continues his existence training, waiting for the day where he must face the challenges lying ahead of him. With the birth of Rowan and Gabriella’s children, his family grows ever bigger.

6th Astral Era

1550 Summer: Birth Age 0

1553 Winter: Facial Surgery (removal of ‘red jewel’).....
.....Age 3

1556 Winter: First Journal Entry.....
.....Age 6

1562: Revealed to be Male. Plagued with visions.....Age 12

1564 Late Winter: Avoided being drafted.....
.....Age 13

1566 Late Winter: Drafted by the males.....
.....Age 15

1567 Spring: Destruction of the Amara clan. Rem was taken by Garleans.....Age 16

1567 Summer: Living in Rabanastre with Anjelo.....
.....Age 17

1568 Autumn: Rebel attack on the city, Rem runs and joins the Chariots.....Age 18 1569

Spring: Large battle with Soren. Master dies and gives Rem his gunblade.....Age 18

1569 Summer: Rem becomes Star. Arrives at Eorzea.....Age19

1570: Invited to live/study at Sharlayan in the old world.....Age20

1572: Umbral Calamity.....Age 21-22

7th Umbral Era
5: Joins PIZZA Fc. Meets current friends.....Age27

7th Astral Era
PIZZA becomes NOIR
Age28
Star meets Gabriella/Aolani/Rowan/ etc.
Star is confronted by Soren again, loses his eye.
Journeys with Gabriella to Meracydia
Becomes Rowan's progeny (Vampirism)
Encounters Hroth woman claiming to be Draganek's daughter

Present Day Age 28-31